ACRES OF DIAMONDS

The other day I went through a dwindling collection of not-read-yet-books. I have this collection from a series of self-improvement programmes, called "The Covenant of Timeless Wisdom". Each month I receive a whole course of programmes, together with gems written in the same style and format as they were over 100 years ago.

Let me take a step back here. A few months ago, now, a certain millionaire introduced himself to me and offered these courses. He said: "I want you to study these for 3 months, and, if you value them, as much as I do, I would like you to be my ambassador to let others know just how valuable this collection is." To be honest, I wasn't sure - then he showed me the first monthly instalment he was offering - I almost took his hand off as I welcomed the opportunity to study the incredibly well presented materials. Imagine, if you will, going into an old bookshop, containing originals of books that are over a century old. Each book has a certain fell, a certain smell and a certain attraction. You know what I mean? This is how I felt when I picked up the first book in the collection. It had a reverence all of its own. It demanded respect and attention - almost as if it were a crime to open its pages!

I digress a little, but I just wanted to set the scene and to explain what I mean by "dwindling collection of not-read-yet-books". I have been so absorbed in the priceless words of wisdom that he has collected from all over the world that I only recently began to look at what else was in the box.

Quite a title - "Acres of Diamonds" and the $4,000,000 lecture. This lecture has been delivered by the one man more than 6,000 times throughout America. There are now CDs available, of course, but in its day (we are going back 100 years now) $4,000,000 was worth a lot more than it is today.

What is it about? Basically, it is a reminder to us of a certain reality that we tend to forget. Have you heard the expression 'The grass is greener on the other side'? Forget it - this is a mis-belief that will always hold you back and prevent the law of attraction giving you the wealth (the acres of diamonds) that you desire. I'll explain what I meant by this, so that by the end of this article, I hope you, too, will want to accept responsibility for everything in your life.

The main story surrounds a farmer, happy and content with life, until someone tells him about the fortune in diamonds that are being found, elsewhere, and what this wealth has meant to the people. It's a bit like the California Gold Rush, in a way. So, off he sets, to go find his diamonds and bring more wealth and prosperity to his family and village. A very noble sentiment. He spends years searching and mining in vain, using up all the money he had from the sale of his farm and belongings. He had given up everything for this quest. He had put his family into the care of a relative, so that they did not lack for anything whilst he was away. But, down to pride, he never returned because he never found his acres of diamonds.

Then, one day, the new owner who bought the farm noticed a flash of light from the sands in the stream. It came from a pebble that had a flash of light reflecting all the colours of the rainbow. Not knowing what it was, but curious about it anyway, he took it into the house and put it on a shelf. Now, the guy who first told the diamond story to the farmer happened to come by to see if the farmer had returned. Imagine his joy as he spotted the pebble "he has returned with diamonds!" But no, said the new owner, I found this in the stream - so together they went to the stream and stirred up the sands of the stream only to find others even more beautiful than the first!

They had discovered the diamond mines of Golconda!! The biggest diamond mines in all history - even bigger than the Kimberley mines in value. The farmer had been sitting on literally acres of diamonds, but went off elsewhere to seek what was all around him!

In this book, there were several other manifestations of the same story - evidence that it happens all the time. The moral is quite simple: the grass is NOT greener on the other side - it is all around you. Some people think that they have to move to the big city, if they want to be rich and successful; others may think they have to move to another neighbourhood, state or country, in order to be rich and successful. They have a misconception that being rich and successful has something to do with the environment - they forget the acres of diamonds all around them.

How does this fit into the law of attraction? The law of attraction gives you what you BELIEVE, at the subconscious level. As you go through childhood, you learn different beliefs and value systems that become a part of who you are at the subconscious level. One of these mis-beliefs could be that it is the environment around you that prevents you from doing what you want to do to be successful - you blame the environment, or whatever, but, you blame something or someone "out there" because you hold this particular belief.

The process to remedy that is simple - let go of those subconscious beliefs! Go take a look around you - what are you good at? What do you love to do? Take a good look around you - what are the diamonds in your life? Are they your grandmother's recipes that everyone in the family and neighbourhood love so much? Are they your recipes? Why is it that you always catch more fish than anyone else in the stream or lake? You know, people will travel for miles to see places of outstanding natural beauty; they can be in your backyard; in the mountains at the back of where you live, or in the great "whatever" that others take for granted, simply because they are right under their nose.

When I say take a look around you, I mean take a GOOD look around you - what are you thankful for? What fills you with a sense of joy - analyse it - take it to pieces - wash off the dirt and you may discover a diamond right under your foot. They are all around you, if you but look!

How did this work for me? I like writing poetry - I didn't think others would like them, but, I wrote them anyway. Then I discovered that people started saying "why don't you make them into a book?" - I now have an International Poet of Merit Award :)

With the Law of Attraction, good things come to me every day! Miracles happen every day! The difference is that now I notice when they happen. I look around me for my acres of diamonds and I find them every day.

Acres of diamonds are all around you - print these words out and place them somewhere to remind you every day (it's what I still do!) and I guarantee you will start seeing them :)

I spoke of a certain millionaire at the beginning of this article – here's an opportunity for you to listen to his free offer by clicking the link below – this could be your key to discovering acres of diamonds for yourself! DO IT!
